The ministerial crisis in England has terminated in the resignation of Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sydney Herbert, Secretary of State for the Home Department and Sir James Graham, First Lord of the Ad miralty—in the reconstruction of the Cabinet and the return of Lord John Russell to office. The immediate cause of the disruption was the determination of the House of Commons to force to an issue Mr. Roebuck's motion "that a committee be appointed to inquire into the state of the army before Sebastopol." Ministers above named thought that "by-gones should be by gones." and, as the country did not agree in this opinion, they "felt it their duty" to resign.

After a week of suspense—amused, as usus by all sorts of rumors-the public received through the London papers of Monday, the 26th, the following as the list of the new Ministry, so far as it had been arranged to the previous day:

Distress in England-Riots at Liverpool and London.

Destitution in England had almost reached its heights. From the combined causes of an unusually severe winter, unusually dear prices for all descriptions of provisions, and a total stagnation of trade, the poor are in a deplorable state. Many thousand laborers have been for weeks, without food, excepting the supplies

In Liverpool the times have been peculiarly severe, in consequence of frost having stopped the extensive building works, and from the continuance of easterly winds having prevented the arrival of American shipping. Th of shipping alone deprived nearly five thous-and dock laborers and porters of work, and of all descriptions of laborers there were not fewer than eight thousand men destitute of employment. Considering the number of helpless women and children dependent on these men, this represents a terrible amount of suffering. Our correspondent describes it as pitiable to see hundreds of poor fellows idling around the Exchange in hopes of obtaining a "chance job," Considerable lib erality had been displayed by the citizens, and about £3,000 were subscribed. Relief stores were opened in various parts of the town, and tickets, entitling the holder to bread and coals, fact? were freely distributed. The conduct of the unemployed was, almost without exception, peaceable and praiseworthy, although want was so great that instances had occurred where men actually fainted from hunger and fell on the street. The bulk of these really industrious classes bore up bravely in the hope of an early return to labor. However on Tuesday, the 20th. great agitation was observable in the Scotland-Road, one of the lowest and most disreputable quarters of the town. By degrees the excitement swelled into the dimensions of a riot. Bands of the discontented marched out into various parts of the town, and caused the greatest consternation to the citizens. The stores along the principal thoroughfares were immediately closed-the jewelers and silversmiths first, next the cutlers and gunsmiths, that has been carefully kept out of view is the and finally the entire trade of the town was These bands of marauders varied in number from 50 to nearly 1,000, but contained a considerable proportion of women and lads. They seemed to have no sort of organization, nor any definite object in view. At first they rushed tumultuously into the bakers shops, twenty or thirty of which were stormed and plundered. They also demanded and received money from various other store-keepers. An attack was made on St. John's market, but the gates were closed and the police beat off the besiegers. Towards evening the town resumed its wonted appearance. An extra force of special constables was sworn in, and a number ravines, and the blanched mountain ridges in Sixty prisoners were taken, and summarily sentenced by the police courts to terms of kadr labor varying from a week to three months.

The Advices from Sebastopol. The Paris correspondent of the Morning Chronicle, writing on the 25th of February, says: "General Niel, whom the Emperor sent to the Crimea to report on the state of the siege operations, only returned to Paris on Friday. Lord Raglan :

BEFORE SEBASTOPOL, February 10, 1855. My Lord Duke: I have nothing material or important to report to your grace since I ad-dressed you on the 6th. There was rain yeserday and the day before, and in the course of ast night, there was a considerable fall of snow, which remains on the ground, but it does not freeze, and the country is again saturated with wet. It is reported from the front that considerable activity prevails in the town and harbor of Sebastopol; large convoys of apparently sick men were observed to be moving out of the place, and numerous carts with one horse coming in.

The enemy appear to be breaking up hulks in the arsenal creek, and to be using the materials for platforms and chevaux-de-frise at the Battery-du-mat. We are proceeding with the armament of the works on the right. The health of the troops continues to improve in a slight degree; they are amply supplied with warm clothing and provisions. Forage is our only want, and this arises chiefly from the commissary generals not receiving from England the supplies of hay upon which they have reckoned. I have, &c.,

RAGLAN. His Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

On the 12th, General Pelisser [is reported to have] telegraphed to Paris that no successful attempt could be made on Sebastopol for a month to come. On the same date, Prince Menschikoff telegraphed to St. Petersburg a report of the explosion of the French mine, as above mentioned, and adds: "At night, detachments of volunteers continually harass the enemy in their trenches, and by obliging them to beat to arms, compel them to suspend their

To rectify the various and daily misstatements that are put forth on the state of the army in the Crimea would be an endless task. Now and then, however, some striking misrep resentation appears to which it is impossib to permit uncontradicted circulation For instance, it was asserted that, on the 1st January, Lord Raglan had barely 14,000 men capable of being brought into the field. Even a less number was mentioned. But what was the

The War in the Crimes. The correspondent of the London Times, before Sebastopol, gives the following summary of the operations:

The three guns were fired right into their retreating columns at short ranges, and continued to plough them up with round shot till they got under cover of their works. Seven Russians were killed inside their trenches, and remained there. Many wounded men were carried off, and it is conectured that two hundred and fifty to three aundred were killed and wounded before they reached the town. The French lost about fift in killed and wounded.

Wednesday, Feb. 7 .- There was an extrem ly hot contest last night between the Frenc and Russians; the cannonade, which sounde all over the camp, lasted about an hour. The enemy, not satisfied with what they had already done, are still laboring hard at the works in the rear of Malakhoff (or the round Tower) and at 3 o'clock to-day they had about 1,20 men employed on the earth slopes and parapets of the batteries. It is believed that the neigh borhood of this tower is being extensively mined. The par apets and trenches are said to be in better o der than they were on the first day of the siege. All the other works are equally improved, and when the fire re-opens, its volume and weight will be prodigious. I should state however, that the French engineer, Genera Niel, who visited the English trenches recently expressed a decided opinion that the batteries were too far to produce any substantial re

There is no mistake about the matter. The fact was announced in the House of Lords by Lord Clarendon and in the House of Commons by Lord Palmerston. No details are known and there are surmises that his death was caused by assassination, but it is most probable that it is from pulmonary apoplexy.

From the Crimes.

The war advices from the Crimea are of the same general tenor as forwarded per steamer Pacific. There is nothing new of moment. On the 13th of February the Russians made sortie during the night, but did not prove formidable. The French lost 5 men killed. On the 14th another night sortie took place which the French lost 35 men. On the 15th the condition of the French oops was reported as excellent. It was runored that the North side of Sebastopol was to be invested.

Admiral Bruat telegraphs the following:-Kamiesch Bay, Feb. 17th.-On the 17th Eupatoria was attacked on the eastern side with 80 pieces of Artillery and six regiments of Cavalry inder Gen. Korff; and twelve regiments of In fantry, consisting of about 25,000 men, under the orders of General Ostensacken. The combat lasted from 51 to 10 o'clock, a. m., in which the Russians were vigorously repulsed. Their loss is estimated at 5,000 killed, and wounded in proportion. The Turks had 88 killed, 250 wounded, and lost 70 horses. Selim Pacha and Rusten Bey were killed. Eighteen French were killed on shipboard. The Russians did not renew the attack. The steamers anchored in the roadstead contributed energetically to the defense of the town. Admirals Lyons and Bruat sent six steamers to Eupatoria.

(Signed) A second dispatch from the admiral dated Eupatoria Feb. 21, says: "Since the affair of the 17th the Russians have not made any new attempt upon Eupatoria. To-day columns of infantry and trains of wagons were seen leaving the vicinity of the town taking the direction of Simpheropol.
